FROM THE DIRECTOR

I am honored to share with you that The Institute of Museum and Library Services has announced that the Orange County Library System is among the 29 finalists for the 2018 National Medal for Museum and Library Service. The National Medal is the nation’s highest honor given to museums and libraries for service to their communities. For 24 years, the award has celebrated institutions that demonstrate extraordinary and innovative approaches to public service and are making a difference for individuals, families and communities.

All of our events and programs are designed to strengthen our community, and we’re proud to be recognized for that. Our goal is to change lives offering people meaningful opportunities to learn and grow. We work hard to ensure that the resources we offer are relevant and useful to those that we serve. For us, winning a National Medal would be more than just an honor — it would be a testament to our organization’s commitment to excellence and our desire to be a transformative force in our region.

Has the Orange County Library System helped change your life? I encourage you to share your story and let the world know just how much your library has impacted you and your community. To #ShareYourStory, visit facebook.com/USIMLS or twitter.com/us_imls and use the hashtag #MLSmmedals.

National Medal winners will be announced in mid-April, and representatives from winning institutions will be honored for their extraordinary contributions at the National Medal Ceremony on May 24 in Washington, D.C. Make sure to keep an eye on the library’s website and social media for news about the National Medal!

April is also the month when we recognize National Library Week, a national initiative to celebrate the contributions libraries make to our communities. This year National Library Week takes place April 8-14, and the theme is Libraries Lead. We like to think that our libraries can lead to all kinds of exciting opportunities, to success, to fun, to new friends, perhaps event to a new career. This month’s issue of Books and Beyond is full of great reasons to visit the library, and we hope you’ll stop in for a visit — you never know where it might lead you.

Sarah Fisk: What first sparked your interest in writing?
David Baldacci: I was a reader as a kid and I loved losing myself in the world of someone else’s imagination. I was also the sort of kid who never shut up. I was always telling outlandish tales borne from my imagination. One day my mom went to the store and bought me a journal, gave it to me and told me to start writing some of these stories down. I did and I never looked back. Many years later, I told my mom what a gift she had given me that day, a way to put my imagination down on paper. She told me she was glad things had worked out for me, but that she really just wanted to shut me up because even moms need a little peace and quiet.

SF: What’s the most interesting thing you’ve ever researched for a book?

David Baldacci
David Baldacci is the international best-selling author of over 55 books, several of which have been adapted to film and television. David and his wife also started the Wish You Well Foundation, which supports literacy in this country, and it permeates all aspects of life. Everything good in my life has essentially come from that experience.

SF: Once you became a practicing lawyer, what inspired you to continue writing with a busy career?
DB: I was hooked. Writing wasn’t just a part of my life, it was who I was. During the day I wrote about things a client wanted me to write. But at night I got to write what I wanted to write. I think it’s the only thing that kept me sane sometimes—having that sort of cathartic and creative outlet.

SF: What is your favorite part of writing books/beings an author?
DB: I have two favorites. I’m diametrically opposed. I love the isolation of writing, the quiet, introspective time one needs to write. But I also cherish the moments in public, meeting my fans and talking about writing and my personal journey, and making people laugh and feel good in the process. Somehow, it all balances out!

SF: Do you have any writing quirks/superstitions/obsessions?

It. She teaches writing at The New School in New York. Sponsored in part by the State of Florida, Department of State, Division of Cultural Affairs and the Florida Council on Arts and Culture. Visit ocls.info/sunshinesseres for dates, times and locations.

By Sarah Qronfleh, Assistant Youth Services Manager

On April 25 and 26, Sarah Weeks, author of Save Me a Seat, Pie, So B. It and many others, visits the Orange County Library system as part of the Sunshine State Author Series. Staff member Sarah Qronfleh spoke with Weeks about the writing process and what it’s like to be a professional author.

Sarah Qronfleh: When did you first start writing? Who was your reading/writing influence growing up?

Sarah Weeks: My mother was the first big influence on me as a writer. At first I would dictate my stories to her, but when I was around 3 years old, she taught me how to make my letters and sound out words so that I could write down my stories myself. My sixth-grade teacher, Mrs. West, was the first person outside of my family who told me I should consider becoming a writer. Many years later I went back to visit her at my old elementary school in Ann Arbor, Michigan, and she still had one of my poems in her desk drawer. I can’t tell you how much that meant to me.

SQ: Save Me a Seat alternates between the voices of characters Joe and Ravi. What made you and Gita Varadarajan decide to write the book this way?

SW: Gita was my student in a writing workshop at Columbus University’s Teachers College. For one of her assignments, Gita wrote a short story in my class about a boy who moves from India to New Jersey and what his first day in fifth grade was like. That was the jumping off point for our book. I created the character of Joe, and we began talking about how these two characters might see the same situation from different points of view.

SQ: Save me a Seat is told with plenty of humor while also addressing heavier subjects like bullying. How did you find a balance between the two?

SW: I’ve been writing books for young readers for almost 30 years. One of my personal goals has always been to create stories that tackle difficult situations without pounding those messages over the head. Humor is a great way to soften the blow.

SQ: You’ve written pictures books, chapter books and novels for young readers. Do you have a type of book that you enjoy writing the most?

SW: I enjoy aspects of each of the genres I write in. They say that variety is the spice of life, and I think that holds true for writers as well. The part of my brain that likes figuring out the arc of a picture book or creating a rhyming text is quite different from the part of my brain that loves creating characters that might make a third-grade reader laugh out loud, or a fifth-grade reader tear up with emotion. Writing in a range of genres also enables me to visit many grades in a school when I do author visits.

SQ: When do you write? Do you stick to a schedule or wait until inspiration comes?

SW: Gita likes to write late at night but I’m a morning person. When we were working on Save Me a Seat, I would get up in the morning and run to my computer to see what she had sent, then I would spend the morning responding to it with ideas and suggestions for what might happen next. We also spent many hours talking on the phone. We liked to read out our work out loud to each other—a great way to work on making dialogue sound natural.

SQ: Is there a character from one of your books that you enjoyed the most? Is there a character that was more difficult for you to write?

SW: I have a fondness for all of the characters in my books. Each one carries pieces of my heart with them through the pages. I enjoyed writing Heidi, from So B. It, because she is such a deep thinker. But I also thoroughly enjoyed writing Gita’s brother from my book Cheese! I love Periema, the grandmother in Save Me a Seat. Hands down she was my favorite character to create and write dialogue for in that book. Gita was shy at times about writing some of the horrible things that came out of Ravi’s grandmother’s mouth, but I had a hunch thinking of insulting things for her to say, like when she accuses Americans of being beef-eating, divorced cowboys. Youh!?

SQ: When you’re not writing, what other hobbies or activities do you enjoy doing?

SW: I love to read, of course. I’m also an avid baker. I am nuts about our dog, Mia, and spend a lot of time playing with her. I try to figure out what she is thinking. I have to admit, I’m also a reality TV junkie, especially Project Runway and Top Chef.

SQ: What advice would you have for a young person who wants to be a writer?

SW: I don’t encourage kids to write books with the intention of being published. There’s plenty of time for that later down the line! For children who wish to write stories, the very best advice I can offer is to read, read, read. It also helps to have people to share your writing with—family members, teachers and classmates.
