What Has Changed?

Orlando Public Library

Through July

In September 2016, the Orange County Library System partnered with local art-supply store Sam Flax for Paint Strong Orlando, an art show consisting of nearly 300 works of art made in response to the shooting at Pulse nightclub. All of the art supplies were donated by Sam Flax, and the artists were asked to create work that reflected the strength of the community. One year after the Pulse tragedy, the Library has again partnered with Sam Flax, this time to present a commemorative show reflecting on What Has Changed? The 100+ pieces that make up this exhibition can be seen at the Orlando Public Library through July.

Florida Fruit Crate Labels

Orlando Public Library, 2nd Floor Exhibit Space

Through July

In the late 1930s, Florida's 417 packinghouses shipped more than 30 million crates of fruit each year. To compete against as many as 2,500 brands, packinghouses created eye-catching crate labels to make their products stand out. On display through July are crate labels reproduced from the Orange County Regional History Center's permanent collection. To learn more about crate labels and other compelling stories from Florida's past, visit the Orange County Regional History Center at 65 E Central Blvd, Orlando, FL 32801.
