It has been more than four weeks since Orange County Library System closed its doors due to the threat of COVID-19. While a reopening date for the library has yet to be announced, our staff is hard at work keeping you connected to the world while you shelter in place at home.

For our youngest customers, we have released two new storytimes each week on YouTube that parents can enjoy with their children. For our adult customers, we have been operating live online classes and inspiring videos made by our staff showing you how to learn new things, like how to bake bread or become a better writer. Our librarians are hosting an open hour each week where they’re taking questions on social media and making reading recommendations. ESL classes and genealogy webinars are being offered online. Our social worker has been helping customers in need by email and phone.

The silver lining in this scenario is that so many of you have embraced our virtual services. Since our closure on March 18:

• 1,447 residents registered for new library cards (a 164 percent increase compared to the same time period last year).
• 1,043 customers attended live online classes (a 1,867 percent increase compared to the same time period last year).
• 214,144 items have been checked out through our digital books, audiobooks, video, music and magazine collections.
• 291 children have participated in live virtual storytelling sessions, offered in partnership with Orange County Public Schools.

We are looking forward to getting back to normal and opening our doors to serve you. In the meantime, we are committed to providing you with the best possible virtual services we can. In fact, we’re even working on a plan to offer a full slate of Summer Reading Program virtual events for all ages. Keep up with our latest online offerings by visiting us at ocls.info or following us on Facebook, Instagram or Twitter.

Support Local – It’s Fashionable!

by Scottie Campbell, Marketing Specialist

During this time, it has been heartening to see people come together to support each other. One example is an initiative from Impress Ink. The local printing company launched an online t-shirt shop, OrlandoMerchStore.com, to raise funds for local businesses which, at the time of this writing, has raised more than $20,000.

To participate, businesses only need to submit their design and help promote it. Impress Ink takes care of the rest. For each shirt sold, $10 goes to the business and $2 goes to Second Harvest Food Bank, whose important work, it goes without saying, has now become even more crucial.

In honor of National Library Week in April, we launched our own shirt on Orlando Merch, which you can find here. Sales of this shirt raise money for Friends of the Orange County Library System. Since 1949, this group of citizens has raised crucial funds for library materials and programs.

A substantial part of Friends fundraising comes from operating Gifts & Greetings and the bookstore at Orlando Public Library, which are both closed at this time.

Our History Speaks Volumes: Light Waves Sculpture

by Mike Donohue, Community Outreach & Administrative Coordinator

Created by artist Christopher Janney, Light Waves is a unique glass sculpture comprised of four colored bands that bathe the western facade of Orlando Public Library in different spectrums of color depending on the position of the sun. The sculpture also includes a series of touch plates which, when pressed in a specific order, will cause the waves to illuminate and a melody to play. Fans of the sculpture might notice the sound hasn’t been working properly of late. Have no fear, our facilities team is working with Christopher to make the repair.

We look forward to having Light Waves operational, and for our customers to once again try to decipher the secret pattern. This sculpture was commissioned by Orange County Library System and unveiled to the public on November 28, 2001. Recognized as an engaging and dynamic contribution to the Orlando landscape, Light Waves received the Downtown Orlando Partnerships Golden Brick Award in 2002.

I imagine you have just picked up a book from your“books I need to read” list. You prepare your favorite beverage and find the comfortable spot on your couch. Enthusiastically, you open the book and begin to read it, scanning through the words. Halfway into the third paragraph your brain remembers that recipe you were trying to share with your neighbor that morning. Wait, what did you just read? You forgot and now you have to start from the beginning, but shortly after it happens again. And then again. WHY??

This has happened to all of us, including the most attentive readers. Our minds lose focus and become distracted with other thoughts, our phones, other people, our pets, that loud bird who lives outside of your window. One could put blame on things like our cellphones, those evil little devices that latch to our bodies and refuse to let go until we have drained them. But is it really the cellphone’s fault? Or rather, is it the lack of opportunity for distraction, it’s hard to pinpoint what the exact cause to the lack of focal point. Why are we so easily distracted and how can we improve our focus while reading? Let’s take a look.

Why Are We So Easily Distracted and How Can We Improve Our Focus While Reading

BY LUIS RIVERA-MERCADO, COMMUNITY RELATIONS AIDE

There will be books that you pick up which you won’t be distracting others. Having a reading buddy or a reading group is another great way to keep yourself in check. Sharing those “AH-HA!” moments can help draw you into the action by revving up your writing and concentration, take a break. Absorb what you have just read, grab a snack, fold that stack of laundry you’ve been avoiding and just rest your mind. Reading little parts here and there is a way to retain information. If you know you have some free time before your next meeting, read a few pages of your book. It may not seem like much, but the short intervals of reading will add up and, before you know it, you’ve completed your book. There will be books that you pick up which have been strongly recommended to you or just ones that catch your attention, you may not find interesting. It’s OK. It happens and you can put the book down. Finding books that interest you will help keep your eyes on the words and your fingers flipping through pages. Unless it’s a school assignment or textbook, you don’t have to read material that does not hold your interest. Finding a comfortable, quiet place you can keep concentration on is one of the most important tips for me. Try not to pick somewhere like your bed or desk where you work. These places tend to be affiliated with specific activities in your life, like sleeping and work, and are areas where distractions are more likely to happen. Having your designated reading spot will be familiar to your mind, allowing for better focus. Keep leisure reading in your leisure spot and work reading at your desk. When in doubt, go for the audiobook. You’re not cheating the system by listening to an audio version of your book. They’re great for those who are limited with time and always on the go. Whether you’re working out at the gym, heading to your next destination, or simply grabbing a quick bite, audio books can help you enjoy your next read aurally.

Virtual Events

During our closure, the library is offering live virtual events through various platforms, like Zoom. Click on each event to find out how to register, or visit ocls.info to find more virtual events and classes!
